White House Sends Warm Greetings

As part of the Thanksgiving holiday and Military Family Week, the White House extends a "profound debt of gratitude" to its service members and families. Following is President Clinton's Annual Greeting, delivered through the Armed Services YMCA.

"Warm greetings to everyone celebrating Military Family Week, 1998, sponsored by the Armed Services YMCA. Americans owe a profound debt of gratitude to our military families. Strengthened by the love and support of their families, our Armed Forces have served across the nation and around the world, defending America's freedom, promoting our values, and carrying out vital humanitarian and peace-keeping missions. And time and again over the years, as our men and women in uniform have answered the call to duty, their families have had to endure weeks, months, and sometimes years of separation from their loved ones. Hillary and I remember with deep pride and appreciation the many military families we have been privileged to meet over the past six years. We think of all those who will still be apart at this holiday season, and we rejoice with those who have been reunited after lengthy separations. As families across our nation gather once again to celebrate Thanksgiving, let us all give special thanks for the service and sacrifice of our men and women in uniform and their families. Best wishes for a wonderful week."

Bill Clinton

Military Family Week, typically celebrated during the week of Thanksgiving, will take place this year Nov. 22 to 29. The week offers an opportunity for organizations to give thanks and offer their gratitude to military families for their commitment, dedication and support to the mission.
